HISTORY

Coffee here, robusta especially, is picked by hand for ripeness, and harvests at this elevation often last four months or longer. The coffee selected from these three communities in the Jember Regency was processed centrally, and is a rare dry-hulled (fully-washed) robusta in a marketplace of natural and wet-hulled counterparts. Fully washed processing includes same-day depulping of cherry and a 12-hour overnight fermentation, a final wash, and sundrying in parchment until fully dried, at which point the coffee can be hulled, sorted and cleaned, and stored for export at Indokom's warehouse, in Surabaya, where it awaits export.
